Comments: Whilst I have no objection to the proposed use of ANPR on the car park, I would like to comment or pose a question with regards to access to the rear of my property. As a dental practice, we have patients who require step free access to the practice. They may be in a wheelchair or just be less steady on their feet.

The step free access to the practice is via the rear door, which is accessible from the car park. These patients will normally be dropped off by someone in a car.

Will a person driving up into the car park to drop someone off at the back door be charged or be fined? Or will there be some way exempting cars that drive into the car park for a few minutes simply to drop off, without having to enter the pub to give their registration details?

On occasion I will also need to drive to the rear of my property, for example to load or unload items from my car. Will I need to enter the pub every time I do this, to register this movement?
