A good range of 19th century traditional farm buildings which is to be converted into a single dwelling. As it is attached to the historic farmhouse it is important that the two buildings retain their separate identity. I have not visited the site and few photos are available so I am only able to make limited comments:

- The scheme re-uses existing openings but to improve the heritage value I would suggest that the cow shed doors are reinstated (West elevation of barn), even if these are glazed, false doors. This applies to any other historic doorways.
- First floor shutters should be retained and pinned back

Condition joinery details (including position in the openings), rooflights, boundary walls, vents and ducts
