Comments: I attend the stables on a regular basis to help care for the horses. There was a previous approved planning application for a field shelter and it was the honest belief of the applicant that the plans were sufficient for the stables that were erected 4 years ago. There is a very small concrete base added for the comfort of the horses. The stables are not facing the prevailing winds like in the original application. Everything has been done for the welfare of the horses, one is a rescue pony & another is very elderly (29years). The stables are of natural appearance and in keeping with the area. I note the comments with regards to flooding. The stables have a corrugated roof with guttering which collects the water into large butts which are used to provide the horses with drinking water. I have never witnessed an issue with flooding as a result of this small development.

The stables are set back from the road and screened by hedges so do not cause any loss of privacy to neighbouring properties, in fact neighbours have been regular visitors.
