Comments: COP 26 is currently underway, reviewing the critical status of climate change. It is now completely understood that the way forward is to minimise the destruction of any viable green environment, while reducing pollution created by human activity. The Froghall development would fail on both counts; the existing infrastructure cannot support the extra road traffic as there are too few available jobs locally, so people would need to travel much further afield to find work. The destruction of healthy green-belt ecosystems is exactly what is creating the environmental problems facing all of us. Surely the responsibility of forward-looking government and councils is to create a greener landscape, not systematically destroy existing habitats in the name of short term profit.
