Comments: This is the farmers land and if they so choose to use it for farming that's their choice. Livestock can be dangerous and allowing people into a field is a risk. Moreover, should the farmer choose to rotate the livestock in this field, dogs (on a lead or not), children and litter pose a risk to the livestock themselves - particularly any sheep who are lambing.

Furthermore, this field being utilised as farming land potentially contributes to Leek's economy of local produce and to reduce that as well as a farmer's livelihood / income for the sake of people who have walked there / played there since the 70s is inconsiderate and narrow minded. With a footpath 60yds further away, it's a no brainer. There are plenty of hills, streams, walks and outdoor activities available in Leek and an endless number in the peaks that are a stones throw away.
