Submission: Objection

Comments: It is disgusting that people think they have a given right to walk someone else's land especially when there is a public footpath virtually next to it, would any of the people involved like it if they brought a house which had a drive or garden where the old occupier allowed people to use the garden or drive and then the new person revoked the action but people still believe it's there right because the old occupier allowed them to. It's hard enough for farmers to make a living in this country as it is, now people are trying to take land of someone because they believe they are entitled to it, there is miles and miles of walks all over Leek and the outskirts. Will the planners pay the farmer the going rate for the land they are trying to steal?
