Comments: 1. The application has grown in scope and size.

2. The equipment to be installed varies significantly from the original application.

3. The location and size of the attenuation pond, is a further instance, and example of significant and adverse extension of the original.

4. The need to now apparently excavate some 70,000T of soil and remove from site, is a further example of significant and adverse extension of the original

5. The lack of related transport planning is of concern for this and all proposed projects. Additional work will be attached under separate note. But excavation of 70.000t means 8750 vehicle trips (double tripped assuming 16t per load, as per rigid tipper.
