Comments: I object on conservation grounds - of containers taking up land and resources that should be preserved for wildlife.

Also, the contents of the containers present a potential fire, health and safety hazard which could have devastating impact on people, animals, land and water.

They will blight the countryside and have a negative effect in use of the countryside, local residents, property values and aesthetics of the area. Surely there are better places to site these instead of turning the countryside into an industrial site. Is it even legal? Is it going to be another Walley's Quarry - misused, mismanaged and left to rot through liquidation? It is a destructive move to grant permission in this area and unsuitable for the area and its surroundings and ecosystem.
