Comments: The extreme height of the turbines mean they will completely dominate the area. An area that depends on tourism and is adjacent to the national park

The narrow country roads that will be used during construction are already over used by lorries and under strain from traffic they were not designed for

The site is adjacent to the RSPB Coombes Valley home to migrating and nesting birds . It is acknowledged that turbines should be sited away from migration corridors nesting areas

The detrimental effects of such large turbines ( noise and light disturbances) sited near to a properties will vastly change locals quality of life
